

ENVIRONMENTAL COLLECTION

Andrea Robinson Fine Art

Hi dear friends, some years ago, I painted my first narrative on the environment, which was inspired by Dr. Sylvia Earle and Mission Blue.

This has been my passion project that I starting working on ten years ago (between a full-time job and raising a family).

Slowly, I've built up my collection - and I thought it well overdue to show you the whole shebang!

I exhibited several paintings at The Wellington Art Show recently, and the interest was phenomenal.

While some of my paintings have found their forever homes, I have many more available.

Please contact me if you have any questions.

THE LOST UMBRELLA

In 2014 I followed my heart and created some environmental paintings. This painting is based on my first painting "Surfs Up", and because I loved it so much, I decided to paint something similar.

There are different patterns on the umbrellas, an extra umbrella, and a missing penguin. The full narrative can be found on my website.

THE JOURNEY

This painting highlights the plight of our polar bears. It's a sweet little painting that shows the fragility and beauty of our natural world.

The success of predator controls that have enabled Ruru to hunt around many suburbs in Wellington. They love my local riverbank where they swoop for mice and rats. Fireworks are the main reason they leave and seek a quieter safer environment.

THE SEWING ROOM

In November 2011, six thousand critically endangered Powelliphantia snails were removed from Stockton Plateau before a coal mining company could harm them.

Other areas were considered for relocation, but as they were also possible mining areas, The Dept of Conservation moved 800 into a fridge to simulate the cool conditions they required. Unfortunately, a faulty temperature gauge failed and all, but one snail died.

This paintings message is that prevention is better than a cure.

The next group of paintings are humorous, playful and remind us about the pressing environmental issues we face.

I've used satire, irony, symbols, a touch of the absurd, and a vibrant colour palette with an illustrative style to give one impression whilst implying another. This enables me to delight, criticize, present uncomfortable truths, evoke empathy, expose vulnerability, and provide a way of documenting this time.

I also believe there is hope. By seeking out community who support environmental initiatives we can make change.

In Lower Hutt (where I live) for example, there are the Friends of Waiwhetū Stream, Petone Beach Clean Up Crew, and A Rocha's Waiu Wetland subgroup who actively work on restoration projects, biodiversity protection, and community engagement.

The news can make us feel hopeless... but by being part of our community, we can feel supported, motivated, hopeful, included, have a greater voice, and we can make change.
